At the end of its fourth year, the French Red Cross Fund has demonstrated the relevance of its position in the world of international humanitarian action. Year after year, there has been growing interest in the debate it has launched about “humanitarian transition”, the promotion of ethics as a point of reference to guide changes, and its choice to support primarily Francophone research from beneficiary countries.

In 2016, the Fund consolidated its scientific mission and significantly diversified its activities, namely in Africa and the Indian Ocean. The arrival of new private partners enabled resource development and the launching of research fellowships on more applied subjects. In this way, the Fund supported a total of fourteen research fellows, awarded three prizes and led a research programme entitled “Mission Against Ebola”, entrusted by the French Red Cross.

Supporting research without working to diffuse ideas and knowledge would be a futile enterprise. 2016 was marked by a number of important events. In March, the Fund participated in the World Conference on Humanitarian Studies (WCHS) in Addis Ababa, and in May, the World Humanitarian Summit organised by the UN in Istanbul with several thousand participants, then, in September, in the organisation of a round-table discussion at the Convergences World Forum. In November, the annual conference took place in Madagascar, following the model of previous years’ events in Dakar and Abidjan. Finally, our editorial policy expanded with the publication of the first volume of the Devenir Humanitaire collection, and our participation in the launch of the bilingual review Humanitarian Alternatives, whose first three issues came out in 2016.

By choosing this year to also focus on the links between humanitarian and social action, between local and global, with the launch of funding for research on the subject of the management of migrants in France, the Fund has been preparing its future direction. Our ambition is to favour increasingly relevant research in light of contemporary challenges, be they operational, organisational or human.
THE FUND’S THREE COMMITMENTS

The French Red Cross Fund is an endowment fund dedicated to research in the humanitarian field. Created in 2013 on the initiative of the French Red Cross, its mission is to identify the fundamental questions which put into perspective the principles, practices and purposes of an evolving humanitarian action.

The distinguishing feature of the Fund is to structure its activities around three innovative commitments:

• GIVING A VOICE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES, because too often, reflections on the future of humanitarian aid and international cooperation are headed by developed countries alone, and far removed from the aspirations and contributions of populations of countries affected by crises.

• PROMOTING FRANCOPHONE RESEARCH, namely by publishing work by researchers from Francophone regions, in a world that is dominated by the English language, which is a barrier to the diversity of ideas and solutions.

• CREATING A DIALOGUE BETWEEN ACADEMIC AND HUMANITARIAN ACTORS, encouraging exchanges between researchers and operational staff, in the field and in decision-making centres, where action is too often dictated by emergencies and fundamental research excluded.

FOUR LEVERS FOR ACTION

1—RESEARCH
Support for research through the funding of postdoctoral fellowships, the accompanying of social science researchers and the awarding of prizes to particularly deserving or innovative researchers.

2—EVENTS
Participation in the global debate linked to local contexts, promotion of work carried out by our grant laureates, organisation of scientific events bringing together academics and field actors, particularly in developing countries.

3—PUBLICATIONS
The widest possible diffusion of knowledge through an array of editorial projects to sustain research and debate.

4—TRAINING
Development of training and seminars on the contributions of research and ethics in the humanitarian field, in partnership with universities working on capacity building in developing countries.

TWO KEY WORDS

encompasses all the issues weighing on the development of the relationships between humanitarian actors and beneficiaries.

Which role redistribution? What place for states, civil societies, international NGOs?

How to pass from a state of permanent emergency to sustainable humanitarian action and lasting solutions?

What future for humanitarian action, between co-operation, development and social policies?

In a world in turmoil which keeps generating unprecedented situations and problems, we need a tool to shed light on these issues.

Organised around the principles of autonomy, beneficence, non-maleficence and justice, the tool guiding our reflection is called

N° 3 OF HUMANITARIAN ALTERNATIVES

NOVEMBER 30th

A special focus on migrations and an article by Virginie Troit, General Delegate of the Fund: ‘Humanitarian Ethics and International Relations: contradictions or (re) conciliations?’.
Everywhere, and by all means possible, we endeavour to stimulate reflection on ethics and humanitarian transition.

In 2016, the Fund financed, accompanied or rewarded 18 Francophone researchers and research teams, operating in 13 countries. In spite of varying sensibilities, approaches and fields of expertise, they share a common objective: better understanding the reality of humanitarian transition in the field and considering the future of humanitarian action.

Since its beginnings, the Fund has granted several research fellowships every year to researchers and postdoctoral researchers on the theme of ‘Realities and prospects of a humanitarian transition in aid beneficiary countries’.

The work of seven laureates from the 2015/2016 call, accompanied over the course of the last year, has already yielded fascinating results which will be highlighted during the Etats de la Recherche 2017 day, and in Fund publications.

In 2016, seven new fellowships of €20,000 were awarded to research projects centred around three sub-themes:

- Knowledge of the local humanitarian landscape: configurations and dynamics
- Humanitarian action, social action, and human development: transition practices and ethical principles
- Globalisation and new geopolitics of international aid

In order to encourage research from Francophone countries, priority geographical research zones are identified and updated every year. In 2016, 13 countries make up this list: Myanmar, Burkin Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Côte d’Ivoire, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Haiti, Madagascar, Niger, the Democratic Republic of Congo and Senegal.
FOCUS ON THE 7 PROJECTS OF
THE 2015/2016 CLASS

ALIMA and the African Doctors: Autonomy and Accountability in the Platform of Medical NGO in the Sahel
► Country: Niger and other Sahel countries
► Project carrier: Marion Pécun is an associate researcher at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SCASS) of the University of London. She teaches at Sciences Po in Paris and was a humanitarian practitioner for several years.
► In detail: The research addresses the relationships which are forged between an international NGO of French origin and a Sahelian NGO, in the context of a common project, a platform of medical NGOs, and the Sahel and develop the response capacity of national NGOs. The ethnographic study, carried out within the two organizations, throws light on the practices and representations of those working to maintain the balance of the partnership relationship.

State Agents and Humanitarian Actors: The Stakes of a Negotiated Interdependence. Case Study in Gambella (Ethiopia)
► Country: Ethiopia
► Project carrier: Alice Corbet, PhD in anthropology, is a CNRS researcher, affiliated to the French Centre for Ethiopian Studies (CERES). Her research team includes two doctoral students, Mehdi Labzae and Gabrielle Bayle.
► In detail: The Ethiopian State keeps a watchful eye on international NGOs, which are obliged to negotiate daily in order to carry out their operations. In this context, the study focuses on the transformation of the humanitarian landscape in Ethiopia, the development of international NGOs' practices, the negotiation strategies which are developed and the conditions in which humanitarian action can sustainably and efficiently fit in with public development policy.

Humanitarian Action in the Face of Rationalisation: The Impact of Security Risk Management on Social Relationships in the Metropolitan Area of Port-au-Prince (Haiti)
► Country: Haiti
► Project carrier: Arnaud Dandoy is a PhD in criminology. He is a lecturer at Haiti’s State University and an affiliated researcher at CREDIP of the Université catholique de Louvain.
► In detail: Faced with the development of hostility towards humanitarian workers, the rational approach wins out. It is a question of minimising the threat without worrying about the causes. What happens when humanitarian action is conceived in a rational rather than a relational way? The gap widens. From this observation came this research on the relationship between humanitarian workers and local populations through an ethnographic analysis of the unequal and paradoxical relationships which exist between expatriates and their cleaning ladies.

Actors and Dynamics of the Humanitarian Landscape in Madagascar: The National Risk and Catastrophe Management Office and its Networks
► Country: Madagascar
► Project carrier: Christiane Ratidirario. PhD, is an accredited research director (HDR) in political science and president of the Scientific Council of EPI-Madagascar. Her research team includes two PhD candidates, Hanitsa Ralamboson and Marie-Donna Ranaivoarivelo.
► In detail: After five years of political crisis, the project aims to study the functioning of the National Bureau for Risk and Disaster Management (BNRCG), a public body for the coordination of humanitarian intervention action in the country, at the local, national and international levels in networks, in light of ethical and operational issues, but also of political power balances represented by the manna of international aid.

The Humanitarian Transition through the Perceptions of International and Local Aid by Burundian Refugees in the Mahama camp
► Country: Rwanda
► Project carrier: Emeline Uwizeyimana is a PhD in social sciences and an affiliated researcher at the Centre for International Co-operation and Development Research (Centre d’Études de la Coopération Internationale et du Développement, CECID), Université Libre de Bruxelles (ULB).
► In detail: For over a year, the Mahama camp has been hosting refugees fleeing the repression of the regime and generalised insecurity in Burundi. The study aims to give them a voice and analyse their perception of the aid which is provided. This aid has provoked great dissatisfaction and frustration. By trying to understand this reaction, the study confirms the necessity of humanitarian transition and especially highlights the shortcomings of humanitarian action in terms of attentiveness to the beneficiaries.

Hurtling or Helping: Ethics at the Heart of Non-Governmental Humanitarian Action in West Africa
► Country: Senegal, Mali, Burkina Faso, Côte d’Ivoire
► Project carrier: Aimé Kouassi Malanhoua. PhD in law and political sciences, is director of the ‘Humanitarian Action and Sustainable Development’ master’s at the UNESCO Chair for a Culture of Peace. He has been a humanitarian practitioner for twenty years.
► In detail: This study aims to confront ethical reflection with the reality of the field, based on 200 concrete cases and witness accounts collected in four West African countries. The final result: a practical intervention guide intended for humanitarian actors, which analyses practices in the light of fundamental ethical principles, but also in light of the normative frameworks specific to the countries in which they take place.

NGOs as Spaces of Governance: an Ethnography of Practices in Senegal
► Country: Senegal
► Project carrier: Sadio Ba Gning is a PhD in sociology, a CREPOS (Centre for Research on Social Policies) member, she is a lecturer in Sociology at the Université Gaston-Berger of Saint-Louis in Senegal.
► In detail: Through a study of the history and mode of operation of CONGAD, an NGO council of 178 national, foreign and international organisations, this research addresses the practices and perceptions of governance within a Senegalese humanitarian landscape which is constantly evolving. How do national and local NGOs, integral elements of ‘civil society’, act to meet the growing aspirations of local people to take over the affairs of the country? What functioning is favoured, according to which norms and which principles and what means are used to carry out their missions?
The French Red Cross Fund is pleased to announce the winners of the 2016 Research Fund awards. The three selected projects are focused on children and the environment in the humanitarian transition, the configuration of the Security Principles in the Humanitarian Field in Niger, and Migrants’ Health and Social Survival: Issues surrounding the Plurality of Humanitarian and Social Actors in the Calais and Grande-Synthe camps.

The French Red Cross Fund is committed to being associated with the French Red Cross Fund to reward these three laureates for their innovative work. They are: Kanto Ramanamahefa, Eleanor Davey, and Alula Pankhurst. These researchers have been recognised for their work in humanitarianism, development, and research.

The prizes were awarded during the annual seminar in Madagascar organised with the particular support of the AXA Research Fund.

Christian Thimann
Director of the AXA Research Fund

"We are proud to be associated with the French Red Cross Fund to reward these three laureates for their innovative work in a field of research which is at the crossroads between humanitarian engagement and risk management. These subjects, close to the AXA group’s concerns, perfectly fit into our mission to protect vulnerable populations."
RESEARCH PUT TO THE TEST OF A PRACTICAL CASE: THE EBOLA EPIDEMIC

Research carried out by the French Red Cross regarding its intervention in Guinea has drawn to a close. The results: a whole list of recommendations based on the local populations’ and Red Cross staff’s perceptions, to better face future epidemic breakouts.

The Perception of the French Red Cross Action in Guinea

In the first part of the research, an anthropological study led by Anicet Tolô Zran, a historian of health and diseases at the Alassane Ouattara University in Bouaké (Côte d’Ivoire), endeavoured to analyse the ways in which French Red Cross action was perceived by the patients, populations, and other concerned parties in the struggle against the Ebola virus in Guinea. The field study, carried out in collaboration with Jean-Pierre Dozon, an anthropologist and the Scientific Director of the Fondation Maison des sciences de l’homme in Paris, enabled the identification of obstacles encountered in the deployment of emergency action, and particularly the essential role of rumours surrounding the struggle against the epidemic.

Feedback from Red Cross Staff

On the recommendation of Alain Epelboin, doctor anthropologist at the CNRS, the second part of the research gave a voice to the expatriate personnel engaged during the crisis in Guinea. An online questionnaire firstly offered an opportunity for expression for all the employees concerned. A day of exchanges, which brought together 23 participants, was then organised. On the discussion agenda were themes that emerged from the study: the management of waiting time before departure, the quality of training and the state of knowledge of the context, the difficulties encountered in the field, the quality of relationships between expatriates and the local population, the quality of the debriefing and management of personnel after the mission, etc.

This work, spread over two years, which capitalised on experience, draws up an inventory of a whole series of recommendations intended to prepare future interventions in emergency epidemic contexts, and will give rise to a scientific article which is currently in preparation.

Christophe Moreau
Head of department, Delegates on international missions, French Red Cross

‘The hysteria surrounding the Ebola virus and the fantasy of 0 risk led to behaviours which were completely out of sync with reality. An example: inhabitants saw people arriving in overalls and masks, who were spraying products on their houses. Without being chemists, they could imagine the danger. For them, it was poison. Hence certain reactions! Overwhelmed by the logic of emergency and security, supervisors did not take the time to forge links of trust with the village chiefs on subjects other than the disease.

The study enabled us to take distance from unprecedented situations, approached in an empirical way. For this reason, the benefits of an anthropological approach seem to me to be considerable. It allows for the analysis of representations which gave rise to incidents. It sheds rational light on an explosive collision of three worlds: care workers focused on the virus, humanitarians on management and security, and finally, the populations, who were badly affected by this crisis, ill-informed and clinging to their traditions and beliefs.’

Promoting the Role of Research and Ethics to Address Humanitarian Transition

In order to share the reflections, knowledge and experience derived from its researchers’ work, the Fund takes part in forums, debates and conferences, and organises events which bring together actors from the humanitarian and academic spheres.
HUMANITARIAN TRANSITION AND ETHICAL REFLECTIONS IN MADAGASCAR

The Fund’s Annual Seminar: a Privileged Encounter between the Academic World and Action in the Field

Each year, the Fund organises a scientific seminar in one of its priority research countries. Following on from Dakar in 2014 and Abidjan in 2015, Antananarivo took up the initiative, by hosting the seminar in November 2016. The aims of the seminar are to encourage debate on the Fund’s themes from different national angles and to bring together State officials, NGO representatives, donors and humanitarian researchers.

Madagascar, a Stimulating Study and Debate Topic

Madagascar is a laboratory of diverse solidarity initiatives which mobilise actors from every sector. The management of risks and disasters is a perennial challenge for the country, which is particularly vulnerable to climate hazards. Statistics show no improvement in terms of human development, whilst demographic pressure is increasing. Studying humanitarian transition and ethics in the Malagasy context seems as topical as it is essential to reconcile emergency response and long-term action.

Multiple Partnerships

Co-organised with the local representation of the Institut de recherche pour le développement (IRD), the seminar gathered together 70 people, at Madagascar’s Institut d’études politiques et de recherche pour le développement (IRD), the seminar gathered together nearly 70 heads of humanitarian organisations from France, together nearly 70 heads of humanitarian organisations from France, donors and humanitarian researchers.

Two days to Further Sustainable Humanitarianism

Six roundtable discussions took place over two days. The discussions on the first day drew the outlines and specificities of humanitarianism in Madagascar and of the transition underway. The second day, which was more specifically dedicated to the ethical principles pertaining to humanitarian action, consisted of three round tables and debates concerning autonomy, beneficence, non-maleficence and justice.

Diffusing Ideas, Broadcasting the Voices of our Research Laureates

The Fund’s editing activities are of essential importance: they enable the materialisation of debates initiated by our laureates, the lasting promotion of their innovative ideas, and the stabilisation and extension of our activities.

The Fund has developed an editorial strategy which aims to make available the innovative research and reflections developed by the Fund and its researchers. The result is a range of bilingual publications which target different audiences - academics, humanitarians, institutions - without derogating from the Fund’s principles: giving a voice to Francophone researchers from developed and developing countries, and diffusing this voice as widely as possible. It is with this perspective in mind that the Fund endeavours to translate nearly all of its publications into English.

Initiated in 2015 with the very first papers were published in 2016. The third, which came out in November, dedicated sixty pages to the global challenge of forced migrations.

HUMANITARIAN ALTERNATIVES

Humanitarian Alternatives is a bilingual review, with international scope, created in partnership with a number of foundations, and enriched by the participation of a vast network of universities and partner institutions. As co-founder, the Fund wishes through this project to take part in the global reflection on practices and development in the humanitarian sector, to create a dynamic of exchange between researchers and operational agents, and finally, to promote humanitarian approaches which take their roots in the “without borders” movement on the international stage, thanks to a pooling of means, thoughts and projects.

The first three issues of the review came out in 2016. The third, which came out in November, dedicated sixty pages to the global challenge of forced migrations.

HUMANITARIAN TRANSITION IN SENEGAL

“Humanitarian Transition in Senegal” inaugurated a series of books based on the seminars organised by the Fund every year. This first bilingual volume brings together articles by researchers and operational agents, on two subjects: “Thinking about the Senegalese humanitarian landscape (and beyond) from research to action”, and “Mobilising on values: the humanitarian lever”. The second volume in the Devenir Humanitaire collection is being prepared, on the basis of the 2015 seminar in Abidjan. It will bring together articles analysing the humanitarian transition underway in Côte d’Ivoire, and will offer an in-depth study of the role played by social science researchers in the Ebola response. Publication is set for 2017. Thanks to the diffusion network of Karthala Editions, these books will be available in France, but also in a number of African bookshops.

LES PAPIERS DU FONDS

Les Papiers du Fonds are open-access publications which aim to diffuse the results and perspectives offered by the HSS research projects which the Fund supports. They are articles of 15 to 25 pages written by the laureates in the manner of working papers, at the end of the scientific fellowship allocated by the Fund. Six papers were published in 2016.

LA LETTRE DU FONDS

La Lettre du Fonds is a bilingual newsletter which comes out twice a year. It aims to highlight the research objects and researcher profiles which make up the life of the Fund. It presents three pillars of its activity: support for research, participation in debate and the diffusion of researchers’ work. In this way, it offers a popularised and accessible presentation of the research supported by the Fund.

Researchers and actors of solidarity have a lot to learn from each other. The Fund’s objectives, especially through the support they give to young researchers, seem to me to be very appropriate in redrawing lines of thinking.

ELOI FICQUET, Senior Lecturer at EHESS

Participating [in the Fund’s seminar] and understanding what is happening [in the field] is essential in order to engage IRD forces in matters of research and to accompany this humanitarian transition for a sustainable humanitarian action.

CLAUDE-ANNE GAUTHIER, Local Representative of the IRD in Madagascar

The Fund’s proposal to support a simple intuition by a concerted scientific approach seemed capital to us, and we are proud to support it today.

HÉLÈNE DEMAEGDT, President of the Claire & François Fund

The approach of the Red Cross Fund seems essential because it is a question of taking the time to reflect on something important: humanitarian action … where only too often, time for reflection does not exist.

ANNE-CÉCILE ROBERT, Journalist and Director of International Relations and Editions, Le Monde diplomatique

As regards humanitarian emergency, the CDCS is working on two fronts: the emergency response in the field in collaboration with humanitarian actors, on the one hand, research on our action modalities so as to make this response ever more efficient, on the other hand. In both areas, the French Red Cross and the French Red Cross Fund are key partners that we are proud to support.

PATRICE PAOLI, Director of the Crisis and Support Centre (CDCS) of the MAEDI

We wish to base our actions, especially in the social domain, on the most solid knowledge available, and therefore on studies of quality.

HUGUES DU JEU, Delegate Director General of the Malakoff Mederic group

Loyal and Committed Partners

Each year, endowment funds, foundations, companies and research institutes partner with the Fund to encourage research in the humanitarian field. Their support is essential in order to develop our activities and create new ones.

A Financial Year which Delivered on its Promises

In 2016, fundraising amounted to €207,000, an increase of 5.1%, which can be explained by new private partnerships. Expenses have remained stable, whilst the social mission has expanded to include new projects.

Our partners’ trust commits us »

The Fund’s accounts on 31/12/2016 include a balance sheet, income statement, and an annex. The following presentation is a summary. Detail financial accounts are recorded in the ‘Journal Officiel’. The financial accounts are checked and certified by the appointed auditor, Deloitte.

BALANCE SHEET

Assets

Current assets amount to €643,732. They are essentially made up of cash, 66% of which is held in a reserve account. No significant investment was made in 2016.

Liabilities

Associative funds amount to €569,647. The majority of the debt consists of 2016 grant instalments, which will be paid in 2017. Since the result of the financial period is nil, the general debt is of €703,916.

A Word from the Treasurer: a Balanced Financial Situation

‘The French Red Cross Fund is an endowment fund created by the French Red Cross (FRC) in May 2013. It has a net expendable endowment of €500,000. Its accounts are consolidated with those of the French Red Cross. In line with its bylaws, the Fund may receive investment income, and financial and material support from private persons wishing to support its activities, and revenues from its activities.

At the end of the Fund’s third complete financial year, the emphasis was put on these objectives: professionalising the scientific mission, reinforcing its legitimacy amongst research communities, and guaranteeing a promotion and diffusion of research throughout international networks. In addition to organising seminars and embarking on new editorial projects, the Fund launched partner fellowships in 2016, opening up new opportunities for collaboration.

This third year of activity has delivered on its promises, with the renewal of partnerships dating back to the beginning of the Fund and the arrival of new collaborations with the private sector. Its actual income is in line with the initial budget and the net result is at break-even, due to a statutory subsidy granted by the French Red Cross.’

Caroline Cussac
INCOME STATEMENT

In 2016, income was made up of private fundraising, international partnerships and the contributions of the Fund and its partners. Partner engagement is encouraging, though it is essential to continue raising awareness about the necessity of investing in research in the humanitarian field. We note that revenue is recorded on the balance sheet as an accretion to the endowment before appearing on the income statement for the use of the expendable endowment. Exceptional income includes the balancing subsidy granted by the French Red Cross.

Expenses (Uses)

In 2016, operating expenses amounted to €475,937. The Fund has neither financial interest nor commitments. Expenses were stabilised and slightly below budget. The direct expenses1 of the scientific mission were spread between the following activities:

- Fellowships and research projects
- Publications and research valorisation
- ‘Matinales’ and conferences in France
- International annual seminar
- Research awards
